Instead, use the .NET Framework's property wrappers to interact with those properties. E.g. Label label = new Label(); TextBox textBox = new TextBox(); label.SetValue(textBox.TextProperty, textBox.Text); As he prepares to leave office, President Barack Obama has come under attack for plans to hand sweeping powers to the National Security Agency. Mr Obama's administration is in the process of ending the bulk collection of communications data by the NSA, and ending the agency's authority to search through data on individuals without a warrant. The president has said he does not want to be remembered as the president who "let down our allies or our own people". The new powers announced on Tuesday will also give the intelligence services the power to make such broad requests in secret courts without telling the Americans at the centre of them. The decision follows a series of leaks from the NSA whistleblower Edward Snowden, which revealed the extensive scale of the agency's activities. Mr Obama's new rules, to be debated and voted on by Congress next week, will require the intelligence services to 82157476af
